Quote Of the Week

Like the Magi, let us not return from the crib by the same route... Let us lead an entirely new life, a changed life, one transformed in God.

SPOTLIGHT ON...

King's Dream, Chaminade's Vision, Our Future

"True vocation" according to Frederick Buechner, "is where your deep gladness (passion) meets the world's deep need." This month we have been recalling and giving thanks for the lives of two men who had the courage to pursue their "true vocation" and meet the "world's deep need." Martin Luther King's deep passion was expressed in his "I Have a Dream" speech 50 years ago challenging us to live together as brothers and sisters despite our racial and religious differences. In the early 1800's in the aftermath of the French Revolution, William Joseph Chaminade pursued his vision for the renewal of community and Christianity by stressing our equality as sons and daughters of God. Both men had a "passion" that threatened the status quo and encountered great adversity.

King was imprisoned more than eighteen times, his house bombed three times, while living with daily threats to his life, before being assassinated at the age of thirty-nine. Chaminade exercised his priestly ministry in an "underground church" for several years in the shadow of the guillotine before finally being exiled from his own country for three years. King's non-violent resistance was often opposed by physical force. Chaminade's "new methods" were opposed by the traditionalist forces in the Church, both clergy and lay.

Both King's "Dream" and Chaminade's "Vision" have endured and bless our lives today as Americans and members of the Marianist Family. As we come to the end of January we are challenged by these men to answer two questions in our lives: What is my deep passion? What deep need in our world do I intend to meet?
